

PASTOR ARRAYS MAN WHO RENTS

Mr. Short Attacks Owners of Property Devoted to Immoral Purposes.

DISCUSSES SOCIAL EVIL AND SAYS AUTHORITIES SHOULD ACCOMPLISH REFORM.

"Social evil" was the subject of the discourse of Rev. Francis Burgette Short delivered at the First Methodist church last evening. The address was for men and there was a large attendance.

"This social vice is world-wide," said Mr. Short. "It is not a social theory that may be brushed aside by a resolution of a Christian church or a Christian community; it is not a theory that can be annihilated by the work of any great man. To destroy it is the work of all of us."

"Social evil is the evil of today and so long as there is a standard for the boy, the brother and another standard for the girl, the sister, that are different, this social evil is going to exist. The double standard of virtue is the cause of it all. The boy can cross the threshold of virtue and live out of it, but if the girl crosses the threshold of virtue she is lost forever. This is the standard for man and for woman."

Man Who Rents.

"Who is it that encourages this social evil? Who is it that fosters these unfortunate women in their life of shame? It is the man who rents his buildings for this practice. He will see women go to ruin to get their money, and the gold which he gets to shame to get this gold. That there is this side of hell. The lowest, meanest scoundrel is the man who will send the daughters of his brother man to shame to get this gold. The man who rents rooms for a saloon is a St. Peter beside this creature who rents to these unfortunate women."

I believe that the man who owns these houses of ill-repute is worse than the man who shot Policeman Ford, for he is taking a multitude of lives and that murderer took only one.

"Another cause for social evil as it exists today is inefficient officers of the law. I do not care if we take it in San Francisco, New York or Salt Lake City. The evil exists and thrives because of the inefficiency of the officers of the law. I am not defending the 'American' party, but it is not responsible for the conditions in Salt Lake today, nor is Chief Pitt responsible. They inherited it. But if the 'American' party does not do something to better the morals of this city it does not deserve another administration. Let us hope that some movement will be started to clean out these dens of vice, and when this movement is started let us hope that the support and aid of the officers of the law in carrying out this reform."

Could Be Cleaned Out.

"With the right kind of officers and the right administration behind them the social evil could be cleaned out of any city. When they do not do it, it is a confession of official rot or a confession of official incompetency. If it is not it should be put out; if it is because the officers are inefficient they should be put out and competent men put in their places. When the social evil is made right there must first come before the people in their elections as the chief issue, the moral issue, the issue of social purity, the issue of virtue, and not the issue of dollars and cents."

WOULD UNITE ALL FAITHS

Judge King Declares Aim of Mormon Church Is Universal Brotherhood, After the Teachings of Christ.

The tourist service in the tabernacle yesterday afternoon attracted many visitors as well as those who are regular attendants. Judge W. H. King was the speaker. He declared that the aim of the Mormon church is to bring about a unity of all mankind, following the teachings of Jesus Christ. He declared that until such a unity of faith had been brought about there would be no universal peace.

Judge King invited the visitors who were present to abide and to make a thorough investigation and comparison in the dispensation of marriage last evening the address was from the viewpoint of the layman, rather than a doctrinal discussion of the faith.

The musical program was an attractive one. It consisted of the "Pilgrims' Chorus" by Wagner, "Tannhauser" by Wagner, "Andantino" by Lohengrin, "Träumerei" by Schumann; "Old Melodies" arranged by the performers; "Ave Maria" by Handel, and a selection from "Lohengrin" by Wagner.

The funeral services were conducted by the Rev. P. A. Simpkin. Remarks were also made by Grand Representative Jennings of the lodge and President Gallagher of the ironworkers. A male quartet rendered several songs. The funeral was attended by a large number of union men and floral offerings were profuse.

THOS. J. CONNOR CALLED BY DEATH

Well Known Resident of Park City and One of Early Commuters to Utah Is Dead.

VETERAN HOTEL KEEPER WAS COUSIN OF GENERAL P. E. CONNOR.

Thomas J. Connor of Park City died at 6 o'clock last evening in the Holy Cross hospital, where he had been a patient for two weeks. He had long been in ill health, and last September he was seized with an attack of the grip, from which he never recovered.

Mr. Connor was one of the early commuters to Utah, having arrived in Salt Lake City with his family in 1886. Since that time, save for a period of three years, he has been a constant resident of this state.

At the time of his death Mr. Connor was 75 years of age. He was a native of Kerry, Ireland. He left New York with his wife and five children for Salt Lake in 1886. Here the family remained at that time about six months, when they went on to San Francisco, where they remained for two years. Mr. Connor, who was a cousin of General P. E. Connor, had come to the west to look after mining interests which the general held. General Connor himself came hither in 1882.

Owing to the fact, however, that there was not much activity in the mining industry at that early day, Mr. Connor went up to the Pacific coast. In San Francisco, during his three years' residence, he was employed in the customhouse. He returned to Utah and located at Stockton, where he engaged in the hotel business and mining. Twenty years ago he went to Park City, where, until a few months ago, he owned and operated the Salt Lake hotel, commonly called the Connor house, when his health became so seriously impaired that it seemed the part of wisdom to leave the hotel, which he did in August. In addition to his hotel business in Park City, Mr. Connor was interested in a general way in mining, but having disposed of the greater part of his properties, it is not believed that at the time of his death he was engaged in any mining enterprise.

Undoubtedly the death of Mr. Connor was hastened by the passing of his wife, Ellen, on March 8 of last year, and of Thomas F., a son, on Dec. 14, 1906. John P. Connor, a merchant, mining man and stockholder in Stockton, died last evening at his home, where he had been confined for some time.

GEMS IN THE ARROWHEAD

January Number Is Peculiarly Interesting for Those Who Read About Progress in the West.

The article of chief interest to Utah people in the January number of "The Arrowhead" is that entitled "Gems in the West." The article is from the pen of Allen Kelly and is a condensed review of the progress that has been made in Dixie during the early days, and likewise points out wherein that favored region must necessarily come to the knowledge of the world's one of the most productive sections in the world. The article touches on the agricultural development of the south, the mining industry of the oil fields of the Virgin country. The discovery of these deposits and their development is a subject of great interest to people, and as well a large amount of capital, to the district.

The iron and coal deposits are given a detailed review. In brief, the article covers everything that one might expect to find under the title "The Awakening of Southern Utah." The article is illustrated from numerous photographs.

The "Architectural Advancement of Los Angeles," by John Parkinson, is one of the great structures that have arisen in that city during recent years, their character and beauty are shown in the illustrations. The article is also illustrated by many handsome illustrations, showing exteriors and interiors.

The National Association of Railway Agents will be the guests of Southern Utah from February 14 to 19. "The Arrowhead" tells about plans for their reception and entertainment, and describes with pictorial aid, the things they will do and see. Long Beach, Catalina, Riverside, Pomona, and other famous places in Southern California are treated in a most entertaining manner.

A feature of the visit is that contributed by Frank W. Schaefer of the Cleveland Press, who humorously describes his ride on the "Arrowhead" locomotive. The article is also illustrated with the latest news from that treasure state.

"The Arrowhead," too, there are many other things well worth reading. It is an unusually attractive number.

TRAGEDY HAS ITS LESSON

The funeral of Edna Bowman, murdered Thursday evening by her husband, Edgar Bowman, who afterwards committed suicide, was held from the funeral chapel of Eber W. Hall yesterday afternoon at 1 o'clock. The Rev. P. A. Simpkin presided at the funeral, and interment was at Bingham Junction. Miss Rasmussen sang two solos, "Face to Face" and "Love Divine."

There were nearly 200 people in attendance, including a large number of friends of the young woman and the members of her immediate family.

The Rev. Mr. Simpkin took occasion to rebuke those who came to the funeral because of mere curiosity and said that it was the place for those alone who either felt deeply as a result of the young wife's death or who were bound to her by ties of love.

He drew several lessons from the tragedy, which he said was a warning to the "Society often suffers," he declared, "from the combination of a foot whiskey and a bottle of poison. It is the gravity of toying with life and the modern tendency of expressing love for another with a smoking revolver is a menace to society."

The speaker also deprecated the tendency for people to carry firearms, and said that the law against concealed weapons, if it were enforced, would stop many occurrences of this kind.

VIVID SCENES FROM LIFE OF THE GIRL WHO MEETS TRAINS

Miss Le Sourd, Y. W. C. A. Worker, Tells of Her Efforts in Assisting Distressed Women at Railroad Stations.

To one who loves humanity, either as a whole or in the individual sense, there can be no more interesting sight than the stream of it which pours from an incoming railroad train, and, dividing into smaller streams, finds an outlet in a city. This task of watching is never monotonous, but has its scenes of especial interest, whether grave or gay.

"By far the greater number who need our aid come under the pathetic head, whether there be laughable incidents connected therewith or not. It is not alone the poor or the ignorant who are at a loss to what to do. There are many who, unaccustomed to the home life, do not adapt themselves to new conditions readily; and these always find traveling a heavy burden. Then too the schedule of local trains is such that there is more or less waiting of necessity, and as there are limited facilities, much is required in the way of help for those who are obliged to put in a few hours of waiting, especially when it is a woman with children."

Case of Helplessness.

"Some of the most interesting cases we have are those of women who have forgotten something or are otherwise not thoughtful enough to take care of themselves in the smallest matters. For instance, a case of helplessness recently came before me which seemed to show with greater emphasis than is usually to be found that every woman should carry her own ticket and at least a small supply of money—this even though she be a blushing bride. A woman of mature years alighted from a westbound train and endeavored to reach the station. She was evidently too much overcome to make her way alone, and seeing her need I approached and offered help. No sooner did she hear my voice than she burst into tears, and told me with sobs that her husband had been left in Ogden, where she was sure he had been killed or had met with some terrible accident. She had no money, not so much as a nickel for car fare; she could not wire to Ogden; she was inexperienced, and the fright at finding herself alone with neither money nor ticket had reduced her to such a nervous state that for a time she could not control her mind. Of course it was an easy matter to assure her that she would have heard if any accident had befallen the man, and by the time she was comforted and induced to wait for the next train she had regained her composure. The man came in on that train bearing—his wife's ticket and all the money he was carrying, when it would have been fully as safe to have sent him home with at least a purse of her own."

Twelve Trains Daily.

"Meeting an average of twelve trains daily, one meets with many kinds of irresponsible ones, to call them by the kindest of names. A little woman with four children came in the other day and she was bound for Provo, where she was to spend the night. She came in at a moderately early hour, and before she could get out to her destination it would be 4 o'clock in the afternoon. She had, of course, little money, and no one to take her. Having no place near at hand, I took her to the home of a good woman with whom the association has made arrangements in another part of town, and there she was given a chance to care for the children and rest."

"A humorous case was that of an old woman who came in a day or so before Christmas on an early train from the north, with the intention of going on to the southern part of the state to spend the holidays with relatives. She was well provided with a welcome for herself, for she carried, in addition to other heavy baggage, a live goose and a dressed turkey. As she stepped out of the train she landed from the train she fell toward the station master for help, and he made a stagger at helping her, too. But the goose was too much for him, and as it stretched out a more properly landed, "gawped" at him he dodged and ran. With the help of others the heavily laden old woman scrambled up and took her baggage in all its various stages of interest—and they were many—into the station to while away six hours for the general public as they came and went.

"But there are other scenes neither so light nor so easily passed over. While the work of the Travelers' Aid is in no sense a rescue work, there are serious things that cannot be shirked even in this line. Only a few days ago, a middle-aged woman apparently of a respectable class, came in from the east in a badly intoxicated condition. Of status she knew men paid no attention to her, but were doubtless glad to be rid of her, even temporarily. She sat in the ladies' waiting room, sometimes falling into noisy slumber, but more frequently belligerent. I finally asked the station master if nothing could be done for her, and he said he would call a patrol wagon and have her taken to the police station. I could not approve of that, and finally when I found her destination and realized that she could get a train shortly, I prevailed on the men to let me have her taken into the baggage room. From there she was placed on the train, but I understood there was some trouble about that course later. Of course, an emergency hospital would have covered the needs of such a case.

Cases of Illness.

"There are many cases of illness now, perhaps, of a serious nature, but requiring at least simple attention, which cannot be given, either in the railway station or the street. For such cases and for many other reasons, the association needs at least a room near the stations where women could be taken, either to rest, recover from a severe headache, a case of train sickness, or any other ailment which might, if allowed to go on, result in something more serious. This is one of the things to be undertaken shortly, for there is not so much as a place to bathe the aching head in the station as they now stand."

"Do we have many girls coming into town unprotected? Well, yes, and unprotected in many ways. I recall the case of a mother and two grown or partly grown daughters who "waded" to go to Utah. Nothing more could be elicited from any one of the three. Their destination named was Utah. Their tickets had been purchased on the border of Idaho and only to Salt Lake City. They had no money, and while the poor, ignorant mother was willing to have any help in finding her way, the only thought in the heads of the girls was to get to a dance. They were apparently both ignorant and silly and they had heard rumors of dances in Salt Lake. They would leave and go up town, and I would not let them."

Good Sanitation Found.

"By dint of questioning and long study we, the railroad men and I found that their destination was Oasie, where the woman had a son. Their money was utterly inadequate to take them to Oasie, and I have known all the time I was with friends. Of course, we saw the officials beforehand and told them all the plans, and when I went to that station the very first day I was welcomed and treated beautifully. All of the orchestra has been played better or in finer harmony than in the closing number last night."

In addition to all their other work, Mr. Shepherd acted as accompanist for Mrs. Gue, and his sympathetic interpretation added greatly to the beauty of her songs. In the orchestra numbers, Mrs. Walter G. Tuttle with her harp gave fine support to the other instruments. The program contained an acknowledged gem of the court of Martin Beck of the Orpheum circuit in granting the use of the house for the Sunday evening concert, and expressed the hope that the present arrangement will be a permanent one.

She heard the word spoken and asked kindly about them. When I told her she said she knew of the young man, and he was in a good position, and she would advance the money and would ask after them. It was as if she were a God-send, not alone to them, but to me, for I was in despair. I hope she has her reward.

"Christmas time was a trying one in the matter of young people coming in without much idea of where to go or where to return to. A very young girl came in from the north Christmas eve, and when I saw the bewildered look on her face I asked her if anyone was to meet her. She told me she was going to visit relatives, and they lived at 52. She seemed to think that a full and complete address, and was surprised that I could not take her there directly. I began at the nearby fifty-two, north, south, east and west, on several streets, for she said she thought it was near the depot. Needless to say they were new people and not in the directory, which is, of course, my first aid. Well, till after 11 o'clock that night we trudged, seeking 52, and finally at one house where we were inquiring the girl broke down and cried, refusing to go any farther. The woman at the door, a kind, motherly soul, took her in for the night, and I promised to come for her early the next morning and find her people. I found them near noon on Christmas day at 52 south on one of the far western streets, beyond even where we had gone the night before."

Work Is Encouraging.

"I have had little to discourage me. There was one poor girl, however, whom I lost. She said she had no place to go and I urged her to come with my help. She went with me, but for the night and find her a place in the morning. She said she would wait till the next train came in to think about it. I had to leave her to meet that train, and when I returned she was gone. A woman told me a man came to the door and beckoned to her and she went with him immediately. Whether it was prearranged or not I do not know. I did my best to find her, but I never did."

"Do I have any unpleasant personal experience? No, decidedly not, but I have some amusing ones. The men speak to me, of course, and ask for information too, but there has been no show of disrespect. I know in some places they do have older women, deaconesses and the like, but I am sure that a live young girl can do more and be just as safe. One woman became very curious about me, and I knew she was not the kind that would do me any harm, so I told her I just met the trains. She asked me if I came down often and again I told her I came to all the trains. Finally she could stand it no longer. 'Is your husband a railroad man?' she asked. I told her I was not the possessor of that article."

Receives Good Advice.

"A kindly man took me for a student, and gave me good advice, and others have taken an interest in me. A few smart young men have tried to get acquainted, but never in an offensive way. And the railroad people have been so kind, especially those at the R. G. W. Union, that I have known all the time I was with friends. Of course, we saw the officials beforehand and told them all the plans, and when I went to that station the very first day I was welcomed and treated beautifully. All of the orchestra has been played better or in finer harmony than in the closing number last night."

In addition to all their other work, Mr. Shepherd acted as accompanist for Mrs. Gue, and his sympathetic interpretation added greatly to the beauty of her songs. In the orchestra numbers, Mrs. Walter G. Tuttle with her harp gave fine support to the other instruments. SUNDAY NIGHT CONCERT SOLVES PROBLEM OF SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

The Symphony orchestra is no longer in a quandary. The problems which for so long time have troubled the managers and that of organization have at last been solved and the future of the great musical organization is assured. The orchestra has been able to give for the past two years was that of last evening given in the Orpheum. The orchestra has been able to give for the past two years was that of last evening given in the Orpheum. The orchestra has been able to give for the past two years was that of last evening given in the Orpheum.

The audience and their enthusiasm also warrant one in saying that Salt Lake appreciates the very best of music. Never before has a program of such a high standard been put before a local audience by local musicians, and never has one met with such a cordial reception. The orchestra which filled the entire lower floor and showed a goodly number in the balcony responded to every number with the same enthusiasm and fairly showered their approval on soloists and orchestra alike.

Interest centered largely, of course, in the two soloists, Miss Elizabeth Eggleston, the pianist, and Mrs. Helen Sherman, the singer. Miss Eggleston, who has not been heard in public in her home town for several years, Mrs. Gue came on for the first time, just about a group of five songs, all in English, and all beautifully adapted to the splendid rich tones of her contralto voice.

Her opening number, "How Deep the Slumber of the Floods," with its solemn note, was in marked contrast to the two songs of Schubert's lighter and sweeter ballads, "Who Is Sylvia?" and "Hark, Hark the Lark." Two of Browning's poems were sung by Frederick Ayres, followed, and after a perfect storm of applause, Mrs. Gue was obliged to sing a song, "The Song of the Lark," with wonderful beauty of expression and tone. Browning's splendid lines from "Pippa Passes" were sung by Mrs. Gue, and "With the World."

Miss Eggleston's number was the magnificent concerto by Tchaikowsky, which was played with the full orchestra in the accompanying parts. Miss Eggleston filled all the requirements in the extremely difficult selection, which is considered one of the greatest concertos written. Her masterful technique was only equalled by the wonderful expression of the orchestra under her direction.

The concert opened with the prelude to Humperdinck's "Hansel and Gretel," which was played in excellent manner. The audience warmed up with the first of the concert.

RULES FOR GOOD DIGESTION

A Simple Way to Prevent and Cure Stomach Trouble.

The sufferer from indigestion and stomach weakness should eat slowly and chew the food thoroughly. But as the majority of people have already so abused the delicate stomach that they suffer with distress after eating, bathe the head, coat the tongue, spots before the eyes and the many other symptoms of indigestion, it is necessary for them to use Mi-o-na, the only remedy that will strengthen the muscular walls of the stomach and increase the flow of gastric juices so that indigestion will be cured.

Mi-o-na puts the whole digestive system in such shape that it can care for all the food that is eaten without pain or distress. F. C. Schramm gives an absolute guarantee with every 50-cent box to refund the money unless Mi-o-na does all that is claimed for it. A guarantee like this must inspire your confidence in the remedy.

"You Can't Keep a Good Town Down"

HAVE OUR GREAT MILLIONAIRES GOOD JUDGMENT?

Have you noticed that the majority of the wills disposing of the fortunes of our most successful men when admitted to probate have been found to name some reliable Trust Company as Executor and Trustee to manage and dispose of the estates in accordance with the wishes of the deceased?

These men, whose accumulated fortunes are proof of their good judgment, realize that an individual privately appointed as Trustee is not required to report to a court, is not compelled to have his accounts audited, and the real condition of the estate he is managing is not officially inspected. Even his bond, if called into question, may not prove satisfactory.

If you appoint a friend, no matter how honorable he may be, to look after the affairs of your widow and orphans, sickness, death, absence from home, pressure of his own private business, inexperience, inability or carelessness on his part, may prevent your will being executed as you desire.

The Utah Savings & Trust Company is authorized by law to act in any and all capacities where a Trustee is needed.

This Trust Company is of necessity experienced in legal matters, has knowledge of value of property and investments, has a system of records and reports that are invaluable to the estate and to your heirs, has a fixed place of business, and makes a business of the care of estates.

The fees for the services of a Trust Company are no larger than the courts allow an individual to charge, and an estate valued at $2,000 or more will be handled with administration as does an estate of $200,000.
